Memories and history combine in Lighthouse Museum

By VALERIE RYAN
For Coast Weekend

ABOVE: Warrenton's Lighthouse Park Interpretive Center is a replica of the Burroughs Island Lighthouse in Anacortes, Wash. and was dedicated in May of 1998.

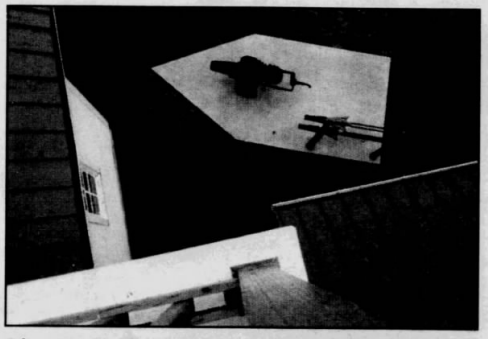
RIGHT: A violin, bow and case owned by Capt. Joel Wilson Munson are on display inside the Lighthouse Park Interpretive Center in Warrenton. Munson, a lighthouse keeper at the Point Adams Lighthouse from 1881 to 1898, was given the name "Fiddler Smith" when he played his violin in exchange for passage aboard the ship Constitution from Panama back to Astoria.

Two worthwhile organizations with similar missions are now happily cohabiting under the roof of The Lighthouse Museum in Warrenton.

It all came about because in 1989, an uninsured local crab boat was lost at sea, so concerned friends of the fisherman decided to hold a fundraiser to help the family. This spontaneous act led all involved to form an organization to raise funds in advance of illness or disaster, becoming proactive rather than reactive. That nonprofit organization, the Deep Sea Fishermen's Benefit Fund, was formed with the additional proviso that they should become active in community projects that would bring awareness and understanding of the deep sea fishing industry to the public.

The Lighthouse Park project is a result of the hard work of these concerned and caring citizens. Through donations, a fish fry and a bank loan, the site was purchased in Warrenton at the intersection of Main Street and Fort Stevens Highway. There was also help from the city of Warrenton, the Warrenton Garden Club and the Rebecca Lodge of Warrenton to bring Lighthouse Park into being. A replica of a lighthouse was built to house a small museum dedicated to the collection of the history of the deep sea fishermen and to create a memorial to fishermen who are no longer with us.

The communities of the lower Columbia River – Astoria and Warrenton on the Oregon side and Ilwaco and Chinook in Washington – encompass the area served and represented by this project.



A harpoon gun along with harpoons are seen from atop the interpretive center at Warrenton's Lighthouse Park. From 1961 to 1963, whales were processed in Hammond by Bio Products.

The second tenant in the Lighthouse is the Warrenton-Hammond Historical Society. Diane Collier, president of the society, has been collecting history about both places for as long as she can remember. She is the great-great-grandaughter of Chief Tostum (or Tostow) who signed the Tansy Point Treaty ceding the Clatsop peoples' lands to the United States. This treaty allowed the government to build Fort Stevens at the mouth of the Columbia River where Clatsop people had their large village. So, Collier's association with the area and its history is long and personal.

Her home was filled with photos, clippings, furniture, artifacts – and Collier knew that something had to give. One fine day, Chuck Thompson, director and founding organizer of the Lighthouse Park and Museum, called her and asked if she would be interested in taking over half of the
